MIGRATION FOR DEVELOPMENT

"Migrants around the world help their families and communities back home - they ensure that food is on the table, that children go to school and that sick family members are treated. I have had the privilege of helping people from the Chernobyl-affected regions living in the area where I have my roots, working with UNDP to offer young people a future and fight poverty, but many millions of voiceless migrants do so every day.

The European Commission - United Nations Joint Initiative on Migration and Development offers organisations in the developing world and in Europe the opportunity to find new ways of making migration work for development. I am sure all the participants at the Knowledge Fair in Brussels will take up the challenge and wish you all the best of luck!"
