10:15-12:00  Session I: The implementation of the SDGs: identifying the development dividends along the BRI

At the UN Summit in September 2015, governments around the world adopted the SDGs as the core of the global post-2015 development agenda. Attention is now turning to the national, regional, and global initiatives needed to implement the 17 Goals and the
The importance of initiatives such as the BRI will grow in this context, both for the Government of China and the global development community. This session will focus on helping China and its development partners ensure that the implementation of the BRI will be built upon a shared vision in line with 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. This will help the BRI to better contribute to the provision of global public goods and serve as a more effective platform for sharing development experiences. The outcome will contribute to the upcoming BRI Summit in 2017 and this session will set the stage for the subsequent discussion.

13:30-15:15 Session II: Building a shared vision for the BRI

The BRI could serve as a powerful platform for economic growth and regional cooperation, involving more than 4 billion people living in 65 Eurasian and African countries. While the potential of the initiative creates great expectations, the implementation of the BRI will require a wider shared understanding of important elements, such as its linkages to economic growth and development in the context of slowing growth prospects in Asia and globally; effective ways to overcome barriers due to cultural differences, incorporating environmental and social concerns, and addressing partner countries’ governance priorities, policies and regulations. This session will explore how to strengthen a shared vision for the BRI among the countries located around the route as well as the multilateral and regional organizations that will contribute to its development.
