

Project Summary:

For more than fifteen years, UNDP Kosovo has provided gender responsive data analysis for evidence-based policy making. Public Pulse III is a continuation of previous flagship research products: Early Warning System (2002-2010) and the Public Pulse I, II (2010-2017). This project focuses on measuring Kosovans' satisfaction with key executive, legislative, and judicial institutions.

What do we want to achieve?

Increase the dialogue between Kosovo institutions and citizens by utilizing research and data for policy-making and accountability through gender lenses.

Results:

Since 2010, key results coming out of Public Pulse include:

- Twelve general population surveys, each interviewing around 1,300 respondents
- Five targeted surveys with different audiences depending on the chosen topic, each interviewing between 500 – 1,200 respondents
- Twenty-one research products were prepared and launched, which presented both data and indicators from opinion polls and targeted polls, as well as conclusions and recommendations from focus group meetings with experts and stakeholders
- Twelve Public Pulse reports
- Seven Action Papers¹
- Three Public Pulse Analysis documents
