Having experienced no major conflict since July 2015, many regard Aden as a test case for post-conflict recovery. At the same time, security and socio-economic conditions in the port city remain fragile. Household incomes and basic services have not returned to pre-conflict levels.

Objective

The Yemen Livelihood and Human Security project is designed to support short-term financial recovery, while also building a foundation for sustainable longer-term development in a post-conflict setting.

Value

The project contributes to the overall stability of governorates, by empowering communities to resist and recover from conflict. It also considers the root causes of interpersonal and domestic violence, to counteract risk factors and promote social cohesion.

Activities

Project activities include cash-for-work, training and establishment of community-based social protection networks.
