Development Challenges

Cameroon remains the main stabilizing country in the Central African subregion. However, the country's stability itself has now come under serious jeopardy, due to numerous internal and regional factors that have evolved from potential to manifested or aggravated threats.

Despite significant successes, efforts to reduce the Islamist terrorism of Boko Haram in the northern part of the country are still ongoing, with occasional setbacks.

While Cameroon needs to deploy more Defence and Security personnel to keep such threats in check, its eastern border suffers attacks from rogue armed groups from the Central African Republic (CAR). Cameroon must thus simultaneously help train CAR Security Forces, a task in which the country is significantly involved and should be supported for both strategic and humanitarian reasons. This is ongoing with Japan support through EIFORCES for all regular trainings for the rehabilitation and the restructuring of the CAR through its security apparatus.
