Development Challenges

Given the current socio-political situation prevailing in Guinea, the risks linked to the constraints and charges for which the military authorities and those of the Ministry of National Defense should be considered in the implementation of this project. The military environment is characterized by a notorious rigidity. However, the appointment and replacement of CEOMP staff who will contribute to the effectiveness of project actions is at the sole discretion of the Head of State or the Minister of National Defense. The necessity of defense for territorial integrity and protection of populations, for which the armed forces can all be requisitioned and at any time, is an eloquent factor that could impact compliance with the project's timetable. The year 2020 will certainly be the year of the presidential elections in Guinea. The possible events linked to this electoral period and its repercussions will also be realities that are difficult to grasp in the current context of Guinea.
